Eight Planets, Twelve Months

Every sign stay of the year on one page

Each lane is one planet's year. A bar is a stay in one sign, named where it is wide enough and marked with its glyph where it is not; hatching is a retrograde span, a dotted line a combust span, and a diamond on the Sun's lane a solar eclipse. The two slow lanes at the top change least: Saturn moves twice, Jupiter three times, and Rahu and Ketu not at all.

The year's busiest stretch is plain to see. Between mid-July and mid-September the four fast planets bunch together, first in Cancer around the eclipse and then in Leo with Jupiter, while Saturn stands still at the top of Aries before turning back. The quietest is the second half of May, when nothing changes sign for three weeks.

The lanes are drawn to the day; the exact instants, to the minute, are in the month pages of Chapter IV and in each planet's own table.

The year opens with Mercury exactly conjunct the Sun at 16 degrees of Sagittarius, Venus crossing into Scorpio the same night, and two planets already retrograde — Jupiter since December, Mars from the 10th. Makar Sankranti falls on the 14th at 21:10.

The month's hinge is the 25th: Jupiter's backward motion carries it out of Leo into Cancer, its sign of exaltation, at 01:31. Mercury, out of the Sun's glare from the 23rd, passes Rahu on the 26th and enters Aquarius on the 28th; Venus follows into Sagittarius on the 29th.

THE DATE TO MARK

25 JANUARY

Jupiter returns to its exaltation

At 01:31 Jupiter's backward motion carries it out of Leo into Cancer, the sign where the texts count it strongest. It stays until 26 June.

Every date agrees. The fast events, the Sun's entries, Mars's turns, the new Moon and the eclipse, agree within five minutes. The slow movers spread wider, up to an hour for Saturn and Jupiter and three hours for Rahu, but in a pattern: each almanac leans the same way on every row, the mark of a slightly different convention rather than an error. The next page shows why.
